British veterans parachute over Normandy 75 years after D-Day

Queen Elizabeth and other world leaders thanked and applauded the D-Day veterans.

REUTERS

Two British war veterans in their mid-90s parachuted over the fields of Normandy, northern France, on Wednesday, 75 years after they jumped behind German defenses on D-Day in an operation that helped turn the tide of World War II against Adolf Hitler.

Dressed in red jumpsuits, 95-year-old Harry Read and 94-year-old John Hutton performed tandem jumps with the British Parachute Regiment's freefall display team, the Red Devils.

Against a pinkish evening sky blanketed in dark clouds, the parachuters left swirling crimson smoke trails as one carried a giant Union Jack. Both veterans landed safely and looked up as the sky was filled with dozens of domed, khaki chutes, now as then.

Read was just 20 years old and Hutton, known to his friends as Jock, was still a teenager when they leapt out of their transport aircraft under cover of dark with the British 6th Airborne Division in the early hours of June 6, 1944.

"It was a different world then. It was a world that required young men like myself to be prepared to die for a civilization that was worth living in," Read said.

"So there was a very heavy necessity for young men like me to put my life on the line. My life wasn't on the line today," he added, describing the jump as "thoroughly enjoyable."

They were among more than 8,000 soldiers who were tasked with protecting the Allied left flank from counter-attack as the biggest seaborne invasion in history landed ashore and advanced inland.

Earlier, some 280 British and French paratroopers re-enacted the D-Day airdrops near the Norman town of Sannerville in honor of the airborne assaults 75 years ago.

Representing the U.S. airborne forces, American veteran Tom Ride parachuted, too, in near-by Carentan, France.

"It went perfect, perfect jump," the 97-year-old D-Day veteran said. "I feel great. I'd go up and do it all again."

The commemorations brought together the greatest number of Douglas C-47 Dakota aircraft since World War II, flying the same route as they did 75 years ago.

The drop zone for the events in Sannerville was one of four used by the division on D-Day.

Just past midnight that night, the 8th (Midlands) Parachute Battalion landed in the very same fields, then code-named Drop Zone "K."

Their objective: Destroy three German-held bridges to cut off nearby reinforcements from responding to the Allied invasion, then set up a defensive barrier in nearby woods.

But bad visibility and missed drops meant the battalion was scattered across a wide area and faced a perilous trek to the rendezvous point through ground dominated by a German tank division. They maintained their defensive front for 10 days. REUTERS

YouTube reversal bans Holocaust hoaxers

2 YouTube said on Wednesday it would remove videos that deny factual catastrophes such as the Holocaust ever happened and stop sharing ad revenue with channels that skirt too close to its rules, a major policy reversal as it fights criticism that it provides a platform for hate speech and harassment. The streaming service, owned by Alphabet Inc.'s Google, said it was taking aim at videos claiming school shootings and other "well-documented violent events" are hoaxes. It also will remove videos that glorify Nazi ideology or promote groups that claim superiority to justify discrimination. In addition, video creators that repeatedly brush up against YouTube's hate-speech rules, even without violating them, will be removed from its advertising revenue-sharing program, YouTube spokesman Farshad Shadloo said. House Democrat says impeachment support lacking

3 A top U.S. House Democratic committee chairman on Wednesday appeared to rule out any imminent impeachment probe of President Donald Trump, but vowed quick court action to obtain the full, unredacted Mueller report on Russian election interference. House Judiciary Committee Chairman Jerrold Nadler told reporters that he could ultimately pursue a formal impeachment inquiry against Trump, a move that progressive Democrats and outside groups have increasingly sought since the release of a redacted version of U.S. Special Counsel Robert Mueller's report in April. But he later told CNN that there is not currently enough backing among Democrats in the House. "There does not appear to be support for it now. And we will see. The support may develop," said Nadler, whose committee has jurisdiction over impeachment-related matters. REUTERS

Meek Mill granted fresh chance to overturn conviction

The rapper's legal woes have sparked boisterous public outcry for legal reforms.

NATE HOMAN
letters@metro.us

Philly rapper Meek Mill has been granted a new trial and judge, and a fresh chance to argue against his 2008 gun and drug conviction, according to NBC Philadelphia.

Pennsylvania Superior Court granted Mill a hearing after years of vying for a chance to argue to get his conviction overturned due to questions about the credibility of the arresting officer.

"We're looking forward to the oral argument before the Superior Court of Pennsylvania and to, hopefully, having Mill's conviction vacated," Mill's attorney, Jordan Siev, said in a statement. "In light of the district attorney's recent filing, where he supports the granting of a new trial to Mill and the recusal of Common Pleas Judge Genece Brinkley, we hope to have this injustice rectified once and for all."

Meek Mill, whose real name is Robert Rihmeek Williams, became a symbol for criminal-justice reform after Brinkley sentenced him to two to four years in prison for minor probation violations.

Problems between Mill and Brinkley go way back, according to Rolling Stone magazine.

Brinkley, who sentenced Mill to 90 days of house arrest following a February 2016 probation violation, had sentenced him to 11 to 23 months following his conviction in 2008.

Then in March 2017, Mill was charged with misdemeanor assault following a scuffle at an airport, and was arrested in New York for popping wheelies on his dirt bike without a helmet, and served five months before the Supreme Court ordered him freed while his appeal of Brinkley's sentence was pending last April.

Brinkley sentenced the rapper to two to four years in prison for violating his 10-year probation, citing a failed drug test, failure to comply with a court order restricting his travel, and the misdemeanor charges.

Defense attorneys had called for a new trial and judge for Mill on several occasions, claiming that the Common Pleas Judge abused her discretion and has held bias against him. Brinkley rejected the accusations and refused to recuse herself from the case before filing a 48-page opinion to the Superior Court that Mill's sentence is "reasonable."

Two months later, Mill's team demanded the conviction be tossed based on the involvement of former Philadelphia Police Officer Reginald Graham — the only officer involved in Mill's arrest who is on a "Do Not Call" to testify list due to alleged corruption issues — after a slew of overturned convictions. According to NBC Philly, Brinkley issued a 47-page denial under the Post Conviction Relief Act a week later.

> "We hope to have this injustice rectified once and for all."
> Jordan Siev, Mill's attorney

Philadelphia District Attorney Larry Krasner filed an appeal for a retrial last month, pointing to a "public perception of unfairness and bias" as well as a time when the judge showed up at a homeless shelter to check on the rapper while he worked his community service requirements, among other instances where Brinkley allegedly overstepped her duties as a judge.

The public outcry in support for Mill peaked when Jay-Z's label Roc Nation, where Mill is signed, urged fans to sign a Change.org petition addressed to Pennsylvania Gov. Tom Wolf asking the state to re-evaluate Mill's sentence.

Don't fret, Trump tells nervous Ireland, Brexit will work out 'very well' for you

The president added the nations' relationship is "as good as it's been."

Donald Trump, arriving in Ireland for the first time as U.S. president on Wednesday, sought to reassure the country that Britain's exit from the European Union would work out fine for its near neighbor.

Prime Minister Leo Varadkar used a meeting with Trump, who has been a vocal supporter of Brexit, to underline Ireland's concerns over the departure that could affect it more than any other country remaining in the 28-member bloc.

How to keep E.U.-member Ireland's currently seamless 350-mile border with Northern Ireland open after Brexit and ensure it does not jeopardize two decades of peace in the British province is proving the most intractable issue in Britain's tortuous efforts to leave the E.U.

Before meeting Varadkar on his arrival at Shannon Airport, Trump said he expected the premier would ask him about Brexit and it would all work out "very well" for Ireland.

"The way the border works now is good; you want to try and keep it that way and I know that's a big point of contention with respect to Brexit. I'm sure it's going to work out well," Trump told reporters.

Trump also told Varadkar the problem with "your wall, your border" was similar to the border situation in the United States, before the Irish prime minister jumped in to say the main thing Dublin wanted to avoid was a border or a wall between both sides.

Some 3,600 people were killed during Northern Ireland's "Troubles," a sectarian conflict between mainly Protestant unionists, who want Northern Ireland to remain part of the United Kingdom, and predominantly Catholic Irish nationalists. The 1998 Good Friday peace deal, which the United States helped broker, largely ended the violence.

While Trump on Tuesday promised Britain a "phenomenal" post-Brexit trade deal, U.S. House of Representatives Speaker Nancy Pelosi used a visit to both sides of the Irish border last month to warn that her fellow lawmakers would not agree to any such deal if Brexit ends up undermining peace in Ireland.

After he and Trump met, Varadkar said the president understood Brexit cannot result in the return of a hard border on the island. He added the timing of their meeting was important as Trump would have heard "a certain story" from pro-Brexit lawmakers during the first stop-off of his European trip in Britain.

"He wants to keep that [the border] open and believes that can be done. We didn't go into any particular details as to how he thinks that can be done but he understands that has to be a shared objective," Varadkar said.

Trump said in his remarks that Ireland and the United States have a great relationship, "as good as it's been."

Varadkar posted a picture on Twitter of a guest book the president and first lady Melania Trump had signed that included the message "I love your country!" The word "love" was underlined.

Varadkar, who had opposed extending an invitation to Trump as a cabinet minister before changing his mind when he took over as prime minister in 2017, met Trump on the tarmac and said it was a great pleasure to welcome him to Ireland.

THE FOREMAN FORECAST: RE-ELECTION?

GETTY IMAGES

TOM FOREMAN

Baby Trump Balloon was down and out. An angry British right-winger had rushed the usually-airborne symbol of resistance to the 45th U.S. President and stabbed it with a pair of scissors while it was temporarily grounded in London.

BTB lay in a sad puddle of latex, the stabber was arrested, and no doubt political comics quickly started writing jokes about gasbags and thin skin. But our latest CNN poll shows it is not really clear who should be laughing.

Because while most voters still do not approve of the way Donald Trump is handling the office, the majority — 55 percent — still think he will be re-elected. And that number is rising. It's a peculiar phenomenon which feels even odder when you look at the numbers behind it.

Do most Americans think he is helping the middle class? Nope. Our poll found only 45 percent giving him a thumbs-up on that issue. So they support him on immigration? No, again. Only 43 percent like how he is handling it. How about trade? Uh-uh. Only 42 percent are in his corner.

Do most voters think he is an inspiring leader? As the kids say, hell-to-the-no. Among reasons cited in the poll for his abysmal approval rating (Trump has still never exceeded 50 percent) is a general feeling that he is "not presidential" and "disrespectful, insulting [and] rude."

However, he crosses the halfway threshold to approval on a single, whopping item: the economy. Fifty-three percent of voters think he's doing an OK job on what many political analysts have long considered the thing that matters most.

Add to that the home-field advantage of an incumbent president (I mean, who else can just stand next to a helicopter, start yakking, and have all the major news channels take it live?), his rabid support among Republicans, the candidate-palooza going on among the Democrats — and it's easy to see why most voters might see re-election on the horizon.

But is all this enough to truly help the president with consistently the lowest approval rating in modern history to win again? Hard to say. Because as dedicated as his supporters are, the opposition is also extremely fired up — even Baby Trump Balloon has been patched and is flying again.

Philly's $2.73 million mistake: Oversized street sweepers

Philly's humongous street sweepers cannot make it down the city's narrow streets.

BECCA GLASSER-BAKER
Rebecca.Glasser@metro.us

Philly's brand-new street-sweeping experiment has already caused a major roadblock.

The 10 9-foot-wide sweepers are too big to navigate the narrow streets of Philly. This pilot program cost $2.73 million to reduce garbage on the city streets and aimed to help the city shed the nickname "Filthadelphia."

Six weeks into the pilot program, officials are already considering purchasing more street cleaners. Each additional sweeper costs $250,000, and the city's Streets Department has not determined how many more are needed.

If the city does choose to purchase more vehicles, taxpayers will see less spend on other city vehicles.

WHYY interviewed Streets Department Commissioner Carlton Williams, who said: "Each year, we look at our capital budget for vehicles that we purchase. Sweeping is certainly one of our priorities, so we may not get as many compactors for trash."

The initial plan for the pilot program was that sweepers were supposed to roll down streets and remove trash from underneath cars and sidewalks by using gas-powered leaf blowers. They use blowers so that Philly residents do not need to move their cars.

However, the trucks are too big to get around parked cars and narrow streets. At the moment, Streets Department workers need to blow litter down the length of the block onto wider streets so that the sweeper can collect the trash.

Due to this additional work, the process of cleaning streets is taking much longer than expected. Each week, workers pick up about 10 tons of trash.

Although there are some issues, Commissioner Williams said he feels optimistic about the program. He hopes all issues will be resolved within the next two months, which is halfway through the project's first phase. The second phase of the project starts in April 2020.

The new program has received mixed reviews from residents. Ultimately, everyone wants the same thing, and that's to have cleaner streets.

> "The city did not get to this condition in six months, so it's a little unrealistic to expect that we could resolve all the issues in six months."
> Keith Warren, Streets commissioner

Streets Commissioner Keith Warren spoke with WHYY and reminded all residents, "The city did not get to this condition in six months, so it's a little unrealistic to expect that we could resolve all the issues in six months."

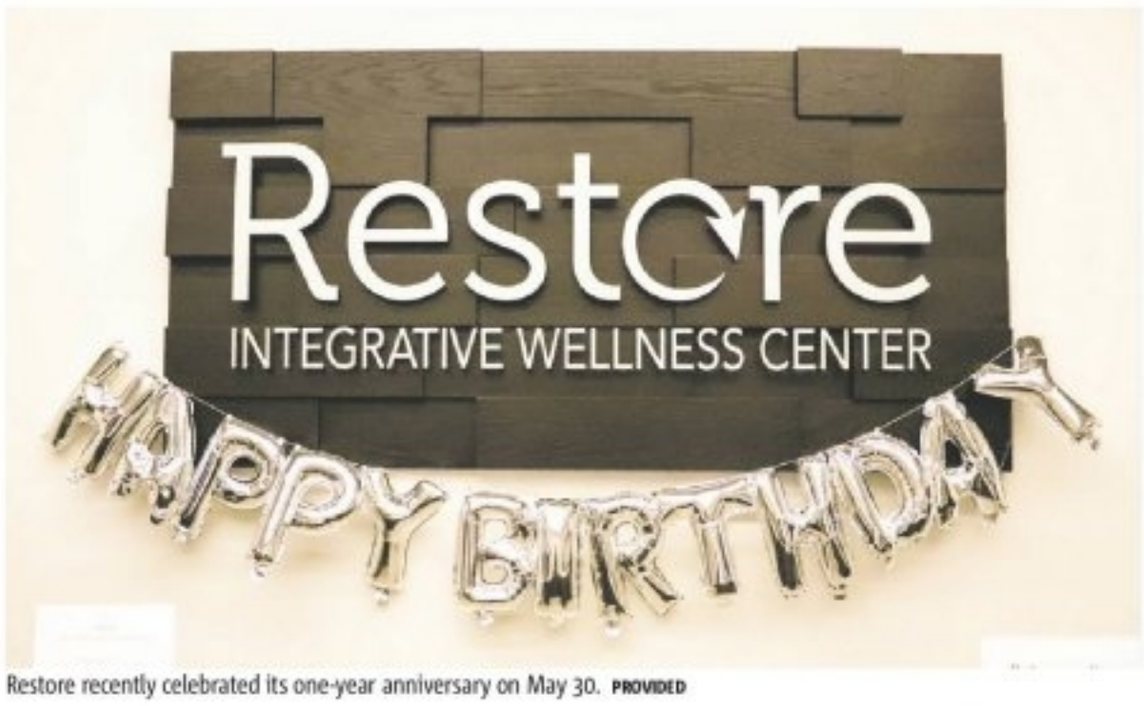
In April of 2016, the state of Pennsylvania legalized medical marijuana, and since then the commonwealth has seen much-needed dispensaries provide critical medical relief to patients with serious medical conditions. One of those dispensaries, Restore Integrative Wellness Center, opened its doors in the City of Brotherly Love over a year ago and has gained momentous popularity with its programs and services. The recipe for Restore's success is simply caring about its products, locations and, most importantly, its patients.

Restore recently celebrated its one-year anniversary at its Fishtown location on May 30, and the staff, including manager Rob Stanley, could not be more thrilled at the success of the dispensary. "I just want people to understand the gratitude that we have for being open in Philadelphia for over a year," says Stanley.

Since opening its doors, Restore's products have been wildly sought-after, and it's easy to see why after witnessing the effort that goes into its services.

"We are one of the only privately owned dispensaries in Pennsylvania. We were the first to open in Philadelphia last year. We recently opened our second location in Elkins Park and we are opening our third location in Doylestown toward the end of the summer. We were awarded the second round of licenses, and hopefully next year we will have six locations in the Greater Philadelphia area as well," says Stanley. "Right now, we are looking around for different locations and trying to gauge where we can best serve the patients. If there is an area of the state that doesn't have that many dispensaries, we might look there."



Restore recently celebrated its one-year anniversary on May 30. PROVIDED

Dispensaries may provide care for some, but they cause a bit of distress for others. Stanley and the crew at Restore are hoping to break that stigma. "Some people may have a preconceived notion about what [Restore is]. We are very professional and very patient-focused. We do have a pharmacist on staff at all times, so when first-time patients come in they sit down with the pharmacist for a consultation. They go over their doctor's recommendations and look over the products we have available at the dispensary and come up with a plan and care for the patient," says Stanley. "[People can] also come into the dispensary and speak to some of our dispensary agents. A few of them are also patients, so they have a real empathy with being able to talk to people and being able to understand where people are coming from with the different ailments they have. Our pharmacist follows up with our patients over the course of a few days and a couple of weeks later just to make sure that they're not having any problems or any adverse reactions to the medicine, and [to see] if we need to adjust anything they are using."

Contrary to some beliefs, patients who come to Restore are not just looking to "party," but more so need the medicinal benefits the dispensary provides. "We have a large demographic of older patients who are dealing with Parkinson's, cancer, and we have a large population of veterans with PTSD and chronic pain. Opioid dependency also became one of the conditions that you were allowed to be prescribed a medical marijuana card in the state [for], and we've seen some folks that are trying to get off opioids that are using medical marijuana. It has worked wonders for them so far."

How do you get a card? If you suffer from one of the conditions required by the Department of Health to receive a card, your next step is fairly easy. "You would have to register on the Department of Health website and then go to a doctor who is registered with the Department of Health that can prescribe you a medical marijuana card," says Stanley. "They'll give you an examination and then they send the department information to have the card sent to you."

Any Philadelphian interested can also check out Restore's website. The dispensary has a link for the different doctors that are registered in the state of Pennsylvania and there is also a link to the Department of Health if people need to register for or renew their card. Restore also offers rewards programs and deals for different customer groups; more information is available on its website.

The dispensary is true to its name: The staff want to help restore your quality of life, well-being and overall happiness through medical marijuana. The appeal of Restore is not just in the product, it's also in the staff that work there. Every single person cares and it truly shows.

Restore Integrative Wellness Center is located at 957 Frankford Ave., Philadelphia, and 8003 Old York Rd., Elkins Park. A third location will open in Doylestown at 812 North Easton Rd. at the end of the summer. For more information, visit restoreiwc.com.

Food and drink options range from mouthwatering Italian cuisine to decadent ice cream offerings and absolutely everything in between. Highlights include seafood bites from Aether, dessert specialties from Weckerly's Ice Cream, vegan treats from Honeygrow, juicy cheesesteaks from Joe's Steaks + Soda Shop, Asian samplings from Neuman's Kitchen and much more.

Some vendors will also be offering refreshing and tasty adult beverages to help beat the heat such as Fette Sau and Frankford Hall. According to a release, both hot spots will be offering a selection of American and German drafts, including 2SP Delco Lager, Dock Street Bohemian Pilsner, Lagunitas Daytime IPA and Schöfferhofer Grapefruit Hefeweizen. Specialty cocktails include the Spring Garden Cocktail and Mango Whiskey Punch, among others. Frankford Hall will also be serving up enticing German fare and Fette Sau will be offering delicious BBQ bites.

After fueling up with all of the delicious edible offerings the extravaganza has to offer, get ready to shop till you drop. Fishtown FestivALE teamed up with the Fishtown Flea — a curated outdoor craft fair aimed at highlighting the best local indie designers and engaging with the Fishtown and Greater Philadelphia communities — to make this year's shopping opportunities more diverse than ever. Each vendor is extremely unique and one-of-a-kind.

The eighth annual Fishtown FestivALE is also accepting volunteers. Each volunteer will be given a free T-shirt, food ticket and two beer tickets (must be 21 or over). Spots are first come, first served. The event will go on rain or shine, and there will also be an after-party in the Outdoor Beer Garden at The Fillmore (29 E. Allen St.) from 7 p.m. until midnight. SugarHouse Casino (1001 N. Delaware Ave.) will be offering free parking for the event from 11 a.m. to 2 a.m.

SERENITY AT COCONUT BAY A LUXURY SUITE RESORT

ALL PHOTOS PROVIDED

Plan your dream wedding in St. Lucia at these gorgeous resorts

Serenity at Coconut Bay and the Coconut Bay Beach Resort & Spa are your perfect "I do" destinations.

PAT KING
patrick.king@metro.us

Planning to propose to the love of your life on a vacation can be the perfect way to cement that special moment in your mind forever. While you may have pulled out all of the stops for your proposal, why not do the same for your wedding? Couples will have it all — including award-winning "I do's" and something blue — at Coconut Bay Beach Resort & Spa and Serenity at Coconut Bay in exotic Saint Lucia.

Just minutes from Hewanorra International Airport, your family and friends have no problem easing into this vacation as they can venture off into this wonderful island. The resorts are within a convenient and do-able distance from the island's famous sites like the majestic Piton's, the world's only Drive-in Volcano, the picturesque Botanical Gardens, kaleidoscopic waterfalls, and lush rainforests.

But once you get settled in one of these wonderful resorts, you will immediately understand why Coconut Bay Beach Resort & Spa and Serenity at Coconut Bay are some of the most popular and award-winning destinations.

Serenity at Coconut Bay

By choosing to say "I do" with the Sapphire Wedding package, you and your partner will wed on a private catamaran with the Piton mountains as your special guests. That's right, Serenity at Coconut Bay's wedding package is one like no other. By choosing this package, you will be married on a private boat with a party of six, including the bride and groom, to make this ceremony as intimate and special as possible. This is perfect for the couple who has seen what a big wedding looks like and wants to put the emphasis on enjoying the scenery with a few select special people.

Once the ceremony is over, and you've returned to shore, your stay at Serenity will be a luxury experience unrivaled by any resort on St. Lucia. This couples-only resort offers newlyweds an unlimited all-inclusive experience complete with butler service to answer every craving and indulgence with 24-hour round the clock room service. Whether you want to eat at the farm-to-table gourmet Greathouse Restaurant, or simply have food and cocktails delivered to you while lounging at the pool after a soothing in-suite massage or soothing aromatherapy session, your wish is your command at the Serenity at Coconut Bay.

Coconut Bay Beach Resort & Spa

If you are looking to have more of a celebration than an intimate gathering, Coconut Bay Beach Resort & Spa is the perfect place to accommodate friends and family for a destination wedding. Weddings at this gorgeous resort are always unique and never cookie cutter, with the resort's on-hand wedding planner available to bring your dreams to reality at any budget.

With both family-friendly and adults-only options, guests will enjoy premium all-inclusive amenities as well as rooms with sweeping views of the ocean. In addition, Coconut Bay Beach Resort & Spa makes everything simple for brides and grooms to create their wedding day memories with a range of packages from an intimate free ceremony to the Platinum and Pearl Wedding packages bringing together the most requested destination wedding elements for a larger guest list with every inclusion for a dream celebration except the stress.

The Platinum package includes everything a bride and groom could ask for with room for 24 guests, as well as special touches just for two including an oceanside dinner at La Luna and a private island tour. The three-hour wedding reception will include a live Caribbean steel band and a DJ, beautiful décor, floral centerpieces and a delicious three-tier cake. To go the extra mile, the Pearl package will also include the same amenities for 34 guests complete with a bonfire beach BBQ rehearsal dinner and a private catamaran sunset cruise for you and your guests.

All wedding packages can be customized guaranteeing your celebration is unique and never cookie cutter. Your pre-travel event planner and on-site wedding coordinator see to every detail and because there is only one wedding scheduled on any given day you have their undivided attention for your stress-free celebration.

For more information on rates and wedding packages head over to cbayresort.com, serenityatcoconutbay.com or call 877-252-0304 today.

Airlines scramble to overcome polluter stigma as 'flight shame' movement grows

In Lorna Greenwood's London home, there is a shelf lined with travel guides. But the 32-year-old mother and former government employment lawyer has given up flying. Greenwood, who grew up enthralled by the possibilities offered by plane travel, is part of a growing group of environmental activists in Northern Europe who are shunning flights as concerns about global climate change increase."It's a tough pill to swallow, but when you look at the issues around climate change, then the sacrifice all of a sudden becomes small," Greenwood said.A Swedish-born anti-flying movement is spreading to other European countries, creating a whole new vocabulary, from "flygskam" which translates as "flight shame" to "tågskryt," or "train brag."

A number of famous Swedes have stopped flying, including opera singer Malena Ernman, the mother of teenage activist Greta Thunberg who has thrust climate change into the spotlight."Flygskam" was a major topic at a three-day airline summit in Seoul this weekend, with global industry leaders launching a counter-offensive.

"Unchallenged, this sentiment will grow and spread," Alexandre de Juniac, head of the International Air Transport Association (IATA) told some 150 CEOs.The industry says it is shrinking its carbon footprint and its sustainability plan is among the most ambitious and globally focused of any industry."Come on, stop calling us polluters," de Juniac said at a news conference after detailing the global initiative. The IATA said the CO2 emission for each CEO's flight to Seoul was half the amount of a 1990 flight, largely thanks to more fuel-efficient aircraft.

An airplane is silhouetted against a full moon in the sky over London January 1, 2010. REUTERS/SUZANNE PLUNKETT

STRUGGLE

Commercial flying accounts for about 2.5% of global carbon emissions today but without concrete steps, that number will rise as global air travel increases. The aviation industry has set out a four-pronged plan to achieve carbon-neutral growth from 2020 and halve net emissions from 2005 levels by 2050.But airline leaders acknowledge they have struggled to articulate their plans in a way that resonates with the public. When CNN anchor Richard Quest asked a room full of aviation executives whether they had used an often available booking option to offset emissions from their own flights to the South Korean capital, only a handful raised their hands. The industry's plan rests on a mix of alternative fuel, improved operations such as direct flight paths and new planes or other technology. But a widely publicized March study funded by investors managing $13 trillion said airlines were doing too little.

OFFSET SCHEME

Questions remain over how airlines will slow, steady and finally reduce harmful emissions. Use of sustainable-fuel would have the single largest impact, reducing emissions from each flight by around 80%, according to the IATA. The problem is that it is in short supply.

In Europe, eliminating dozens of national airspaces borders could reduce fuel consumption by around 6 percent, but lobbying for a Single European Sky has been bogged down for years.

Airlines say small steps like single-engine taxiing and the use of lighter materials are cutting around 1-2% of emissions each year.In the absence of a quick and substantial reduction its carbon footprint, the industry has committed to a carbon-offset program. In Stockholm, Susanna Elfors says membership on her Facebook group Tagsemester, or "Train Holiday," has spiked to some 90,000 members from around 3,000 around the end of 2017.

"Before, it was rather taboo" to discuss train travel due to climate concerns, Elfors said. "Now it's possible to talk about this on a lunch break ... and everybody understands." REUTERS

Women's World Cup betting preview

There are a boatload of props and offers on Team USA.

MATT BURKE

The Olympics used to be the signature event that would garner the rooting interest of nearly the entire U.S. population.

But there was a seismic shift 20 years ago when Brandi Chastain scored that unforgettable penalty shootout goal to beat China in the Women's World Cup Final. Given that the Olympics do not move the needle as much as they once did; given that the sport of soccer has grown by leaps and bounds over the past 20 years in the U.S.; and given that the men's U.S. soccer team usually stinks, one could easily make the case that rooting on the U.S. women in the Women's World Cup has become the most patriotic thing you can do as an American sports fan.

Backing the U.S. women can become even more fun over the next month if you have an American dollar or two riding on the matches.

DraftKings Sportsbook has several intriguing betting opportunities surrounding the Women's World Cup, including one that straight-up pays you to root on Team USA.

DK's "Goal, Goal, USA!" promotion gives you one DK dollar for every goal they score throughout the tournament.

To take advantage of this opportunity through MetroBet and also get a $200 deposit bonus, go to:

As far as odds on which team will win the whole shebang, here are the favorites:

USA +350
France +360
Germany +500
England +650
Japan +1400
Australia +1600

DraftKings Sportsbook also has odds on which player will win the Golden Ball, which is awarded to the top player in the tournament:

Alex Morgan (USA) +400
Carli Lloyd (+700)
A. Henry (FRA) +900
S. Kerr (AUS) +900
D. Marozsan (GER) +1100
E. LeSommer (FRA) +1300
M. Rapinoe (USA) +1300

Cup Final Game 5 betting preview

Blues at Bruins
Moneyline: Blues +135, Bruins -155
Puckline: Blues +1.5 goals (-210), Bruins -1.5 goals (+180)
Betting Total: 5.5 goals (Over +125, Under -145)
Time (Eastern), TV: 8 p.m., NBC

The Bruins and their depleted defense will try to take a pivotal Game 5 from the Blues at TD Garden on Thursday. The Blues were able to answer the bell and win a crucial Game 4 in St. Louis on Monday thanks in part to the absence of Bruins defenseman Zdeno Chara. The Boston team captain, 42, reportedly broke his jaw after attempting to deflect a shot by Blues center Brayden Schenn. Assuming he can't suit up for Game 5, Charlie McAvoy will have to step up, but he is embracing that challenge.

McAvoy leads the team in ice time at 24:24 minutes per game in the postseason. Matt Grzelcyk, who suffered a head injury in Game 2, has already been missing for two games, hamstringing the Bruins' stoppers. Vladimir Tarasenko and Schenn should pepper Tuukka Rask with shots in this one, as they did when they registered 38 shots in Game 4.

Boston's power play should get some extra ice time with the series back in Boston. The Bruins have already gotten 16 chances in four games, cashing in six times.

The play: Blues vs. Bruins Over 5.5 goals (+125)

Phillies OF still in need of depth

Even with the acquisition of Jay Bruce, Andrew McCutchen's injury shows the need for more depth in the outfield.

JOE PANTORNO
joseph.pantorno@metro.us

Jay Bruce had a monster debut with the Phillies on Tuesday night, but more depth is needed. GETTY IMAGES

The loss of outfielder Andrew McCutchen for the season after suffering a torn ACL was cushioned on Tuesday night when Jay Bruce went off in his Phillies debut.

Acquired from the Seattle Mariners on Sunday, the veteran outfielder launched two home runs with six RBI, including a grand slam, in a 9-6 victory to end a five-game skid.

It's the exact kind of impact the Phillies were hoping for when they got him.

Despite a .227 batting average this season, Bruce already has hit 16 home runs over his first 49 games. He had just nine in 94 appearances with the New York Mets last season.

History suggests that Bruce will get that average up a bit with a .249 mark from 2008-2017, which will be important if he is going to be the team's starting left fielder for the remainder of the season.

But with McCutchen sidelined for the rest of the year after injuring his knee in a rundown, the Phillies might once again be on the lookout for outfield depth on the market.

What Philadelphia has to work with right now to help ease the loss of McCutchen is not going to instill confidence.

Scott Kingery is the team's current starting third baseman thanks to the continuous struggles of Maikel Franco.

The 25-year-old is batting .333 in 25 games this season and is penciled in as a reserve outfielder as well. However, Franco slashing .213/.288/.401 through 58 games isn't going to allow manager Gabe Kapler to just throw Kingery back in center field consistently.

Roman Quinn — who is believed to be one of the Phillies' most versatile outfield talents — continues to deal with injury issues. He's expected to be out until mid-June because of a groin strain. It's just the latest knock to the 26-year-old, who has appeared in seven games this season and just 72 in total since 2016.

Shortly after McCutchen's injury, the Phillies promoted Adam Haseley from triple-A Lehigh Valley for some much-needed depth. However, Haseley spent just six games in triple-A before the call-up.

Last year's eighth-overall pick slashed .275/.358/.466 with seven home runs and 23 RBI 47 combined games between double and triple-A.

That's quite a jump for a 23-year-old who was in advanced A ball at the start of 2018.

Given the Phillies' aggressive tendencies on the free-agent and trade markets these past few months, it wouldn't be surprising if GM Matt Klentak picked up another outfielder.

Don't expect another bigger name like Bruce, however.

The Mets could be in sell mode shortly as they continue struggling to stay afloat in the still-open NL East. They have a couple of veteran outfielders that could be on the block for a cheaper price, including Juan Lagares and Carlos Gomez.

They also have Matt Kemp in triple-A Syracuse as well.

As the Mets continue to look for ways to fit the bats of JD Davis and Dominic Smith into the lineup, moving them to the outfield has created some more chances for them. Once Brandon Nimmo returns from injury, Lagares and Gomez become further expendable.

Flyers bust Lehtera heading back to KHL

The Jori Lehtera experiment looks to be officially over for the Philadelphia Flyers.

After two disappointing seasons, the Finnish center is on his way to Russia, signing a one-year deal with SKA St. Petersburg of the KHL, per Russian news outlet R-Sport.

Lehtera, 31, spent five seasons in the NHL after a dominating spell in Russia. His final two seasons in the KHL saw him average 46 points in 50 games per year.

The St. Louis Blues first took a chance on him in 2014, though his offensive prowess didn't translate to North America.

His point production decreased over his first three years in the NHL, dropping from 44 to 34, to just 22 in 2016-17.

It prompted the Blues to deal Lehtera and a pair of draft picks to the Flyers for Brayden Schenn.

Schenn is currently a key piece of a Blues team battling it out for the Stanley Cup against the Boston Bruins after recording a combined 124 points in two seasons since heading to St. Louis.

While one of the picks the Flyers received turned into Morgan Frost — who continues to rip up the OHL with the Sault Ste. Marie Greyhounds with at least 109 points in each of the last two years — Lehtera was a bust.

In 2017-18, he put up just three goals and five assists in 62 games as he failed to live up to the expectations of being a bottom-six forward.

Those weren't lofty goals to begin with.

It got even worse this season as Lehtera appeared in just 27 games, scoring a goal and adding two assists as he split time in the minors.

The Flyers have been plenty busy looking for upgrades at the center position in the meantime. They pulled off a trade on Monday night with the Winnipeg Jets for power forward Kevin Hayes, who was coming off a career year.

Hayes will be an unrestricted free agent on Jul. 1, but the Flyers' ability to pull off the trade allows them exclusive negotiating rights until the end of the month.
